

Art Therapy as Non-Verbal, Visual Processing in Client Work

Facilitating deeper client work/expression using Art as an accessible intervention.

This is a rare opportunity to develop understanding and skill in the use of art as visual processing in therapy and particularly in trauma treatment and recovery. When clients find it difficult to talk about an event, situation, relationship, feeling etc. a non-verbal expression can open up expression and make way for therapeutic work. Trauma memory can be a visual reoccurrence or recollection, that is triggered unexpectedly at times and using art becomes a relevant approach regardless of a person's artistic ability.

Externalising visual trauma memory can be therapeutic if done so respectfully and safely, with the client's material being monitored and paced appropriately. While a traumatic event can traumatise those not only involved but also those related to the trauma. This may be vicariously through offering treatment, or by knowing people involved or a traumatic event can cause an earlier trauma to resurface.

It can be difficult to verbally describe visual memories and experiences which can risk a re-traumatisation. Therapeutic use of art is described and demonstrated and demonstrated - drawing on recent events and media imagery, this workshop explores alternate ways to assist our clients who may have been exposed to traumatic situations and events. Disasters can traumatise people unexpectedly and this can be at a local, national or international level. Post-traumatic stress is considered and examined as a part of the day's training.

In this workshop the use of art therapy approaches to counselling will be explored in the context of promoting emotional health and enhancing a sense of well-being. This workshop provides skills development to explore strategies that facilitate safe processing of recurring traumatic images and unresolved or unexpressed internal experience.

Learning objectives of this training:

1. Learn how to process artwork safely, respectfully and constructively.
2. Enhance non-verbal visual processing skills.
3. Be able to design art directives as intervention relevant to client content.
4. Better understanding of visual retention of traumatic memory.
5. Explore use of art as an intervention in many areas of client work.

Feedback for Annette’s recent training presentations:

“The kit is excellent with so many different things - enough to take into my practice and use for some time- thank you ☺ This seminar reminded me to stay true to my own approach and gave me confidence in my practice. It added to my skills and gave me more ideas in how to easily integrate art therapy.”

“Best investment in my professional development, and that includes my psychology degree...helped me reclaim the language of metaphor, led to a depth of emotional expression (that) has benefited myself, my wife and my clients ...”

“It was wonderful to see how art and therapy can support clients so imply - Annette’s practice examples we wonderful and helpful.”

“Presenter and presentation material were just excellent- so much food for thought offered, practical and inclusive regardless of any knowledge or experience with art.”

“Annette, you’re inspirational, informative and a super creative presenter!”

“I really enjoyed this training and am encouraged to pass this information on to my colleagues. I believe we need more opportunities to support expression in our clients and this has helped with that – and I am not artistic at all!”

“Valuable information, resources and professional insights...highly recommended.”

“Offers an excellent basis in understanding theory and practice from Australian and overseas perspectives.”

“Fun, informative, inspiring and I have never been good at art and it didn’t matter!”

“Made me more aware of my inner feelings and self-worth...gave words when I may not have used any.”

“A unique experience for the development of both professional skills and tapping into a personal creativity I didn’t know I had – awesome!!”

“Wonderfully organised – highly professional, great value and a great day!”

“It is so exciting to try new ways of engaging with clients in therapy and to revisit the theory underpinning the use of art and non-verbal expression. Thank you for a magical training – Art is magical!”
